

It Just Happened!

The story is told of a science professor who constructed a planetarium, a precisely scale model of the universe. A student came into his office and asked him who made it. The professor said, “No one.”

The student laughed and asked again, “Come on, who make this fantastic piece of precise work?” The professor replied, “No one. It just happened.”

The student became confused and angry, and the professor said, “Well, if you can go out of this class and look at nature around you and believe it just happened, you can also believe this precise piece of work happened without a Creator!”
