This Day's Thought

God is saying to you today… stop worrying about what you cannot control. I know your heart feels heavy, and your mind keeps replaying the same concerns over and over again. You keep trying to figure everything out, trying to predict the future, trying to fix what feels uncertain.

But the truth is… some battles are not yours to fight. Some situations are not yours to carry. And some outcomes are not yours to control. Worrying will not change tomorrow, but trusting God will change your peace today. Because while you are stressing, God is working. While you are losing sleep, God is preparing answers. And while you feel stuck, God is already making a way forward.

You don't have to hold everything together. You don't have to carry every burden alone. God never asked you to control your life — He asked you to trust Him with it.

So, release the fear. Release the pressure. Release the need to understand everything right now. Replace your worry with prayer. Replace your fear with faith. Replace your stress with surrender.

God has not brought you this far to abandon you. He is faithful, He is present, and He is already working things out for your good. Today, choose peace. Choose trust. Choose to place it all in God's hands.
